

Consider a linear optimization problem such that there is more than one optimal solution. We claim that, in this case, there are at least two vertices that are optimal. Is this claim true or not? Prove it, or find a counter-example.